Dear Subscriber,

We are pleased to inform you that Excerpta Medica has now developed a completely automated system of processing, storage and retrieval of the abstracts, prepared by its editors, of the world's biomedical literature.

A significant application of Excerpta Medica's basic computer system, which became fully operational on January 1, 1969, is the printing of the Excerpta Medica abstracting journals by means of an electronic composing device. The employment of these advanced processing and printing techniques has not only reduced considerably the time-lag in publication of the abstracts, but has markedly enhanced the readability of the journals.

No system of this kind, which involves radical changes in processing, can be accomplished entirely without disturbing the normal regularity of publication. At present, there is a small backlog in the publication of some of the abstracting journals. If you are not receiving your Excerpta Medica issues with the usual regularity, please be assured that you will shortly receive all outstanding issues. We guarantee the mailing of all 1969 issues during 1969.

Within the next few weeks we shall be making available to you, at a minimal cost, a comprehensive guide to the location of abstracts contained in the whole Excerpta Medica abstracting series. We believe this guide will be an invaluable aid to medical libraries receiving several or all of the abstracting series. Copies may be ordered through any Excerpta Medica office or your usual bookseller or subscription agency.

Please do not hesitate to let us know how best we may continue to serve you.

Sincerely yours,
EXCERPTA MEDICA FOUNDATION
